

Absolutely. Verizon has proved repeatedly that they are less than competent at providing DSL service, refusing to offer consumers high-end services, and providing poor customer service to direct and indirect (thorough other ISP) customers.

Verizon and other providers can't be left alone to provide services, or they will continue to provide late and poor options for consumers. Customers need the option to work with other ISPs for broadband services.